Unreached Prayer Focus: Mongolians

Thirty years ago, Mongolia was a Soviet state. Communism and atheism were the country's official beliefs, but many also practiced Buddhism and Shamanism. There were no more than eight known Christian believers in the entire nation.

During the 1989 Lausanne Congress in the Philippines, hundreds of Christian leaders and missionaries focused their prayers on Mongolia asking God for a breakthrough. Little did they know their prayers were about to be answered. The next year, the USSR broke apart, Mongolia gained independence, and the first Mongolian Bible translation was completed. The first Christian church was planted in May of 1991.

Today Christian believers number approximately 2% of the total population (as reported by the Joshua Project). The slow progress is understandable. Mongolia is an enormous country with extreme temperatures. Many still live a nomadic lifestyle in hard-to-reach areas. Recently the political pressures from Russia and China (its only two neighbors) have intensified, and opposition to the Gospel has increased.
